

Car Donations: Which Vehicles are Accepted?

Article by: Mariah Cruz

Are you the owner of a car that you no longer use? Whether that car is in perfect working condition or needs a few small repairs, did you know that you could donate your car? Each year, thousands of Americans make the decision to donate their old, unwanted vehicles. If you are just letting your vehicle take up space in your yard, garage, or driveway, you are advised to give a car donation some thought.

When it comes to car donations, there are many car owners who have a number of questions. Some of those questions pertain to the purpose of car donations, as well as what you can get out of them. Out of all of the questions asked, there is one that is extremely important. That question is centered on what types of cars are accepted. One of the reasons why many car owners decide not to donate their cars, aside from wanting to sell it, is because they think their car isn't good enough for a donation; however, chances are it is.

If given the choice, most local charities and car donation programs would prefer to have a car that is in perfect working condition. Unfortunately, many car owners, who have a car in perfect working condition, make the decision to sell it. Therefore, many car donation programs and local charities have become less selective. Essentially, this means that there is a good chance that your car will be taken, no matter what condition it is in. In fact, some local charities or car donation programs will even accept your car if it doesn't run. Many of these groups have individuals who would repair your vehicle, free of charge or for a discounted price.

When keeping the above mentioned information in mind, it is important to remember that not everyone has the same set of standards. For instance, when it comes to donating your car, you have a number of different options. Those options include a car donation program or local charities. A car donation program works to find local charities and they also offer a number of other services. When it comes to fixing up a car, they tend to have more time and more money to spend than local charities. Essentially, this means that the condition of your vehicle may have a significant impact on where you can donate your car to and who will accept your car donation.

Although the words car donations are used to describe these types of donations, you don't necessarily have to limit yourself to a traditional car. Many car donation programs, as well as local charities, would be more than willing to accept a wide variety of different vehicle types. These vehicles may include full size vans, mini vans, trucks, and SUVs. Whether you own one of these vehicles or a traditional car, there is a good chance that some charitable organization would be able to benefit from your car donation. Mariah Cruz is a writer for Car Angel . com where you will see abundant amounts of information on things such as Car donations and other related information.

<http://www.carangel.com>